Yen's Surge Alters Face of Asia

Race to Be the 'Next Japan' Brings New Wealth, Alliances

By Nicholas D. Kristof HONG KONG — The surge in the value of the Japanese yen is changing Asia, altering long-time alliances and bringing new pros-perity from Taiwan to Thailand.

Two years ago, as American officials plotted to lower the value of the U.S. dollar and raise the value of the yen, their main goal was to reduce the enormous U.S. trade deficit. That has not happened so far, but within Asia the consequences have already been im-

Another approach the White House already has put into effect is using regulations and executive orders to achieve policies that might

The bug collectors work for the U.S. Department of Agriculture's European Parasite Laboratory here. What they are really after are the natural enemies of these agricultural pests, the parasites that live on them or feed off their eggs. There is a multimillion-dollar man-vs.-bug struggle being waged on U.S. farms, and the European parasites are one weapon against the munching, sucking little creatures that thrive on alfalfa, soy beans, California tomatoes and portions of the flesh of beef cattle. The first shipments of French and Spanish parasites have just been sent to farmers in the Sacramento Valley in California, where the stinkbugs appeared in tomato fields

The European Parasite Laboratory sent 1,900 parasite-containing eggs, most of them bred in the lab. Scientists at the University of California, Davis, will breed the eggs into hundreds of thousands of parasites before releasing them in

m the United States came from Europe."

"They may not be a pest in Europe," he said, "because they grew up over the centuries with natural enemies parasites and predators - that keep them under control." The bugs arrive from Europe in food or grain shipments and start eating up the United States with impunity because their parasitic partners have been left behind.

The obvious thing to do was import a natural enemy of the stinkbug," said Lester E. Ehler, professor of entomology

Instead of repeated sprayings of costly chemicals, once a parasite takes hold, the farmer may never have to spray again.

When Mr. Ehler asked for help with the stinkbug invasion, Walker A. Jones, an agent in Behoust, set out in June to find parasite-filled egg masses in parts of Europe whose climate matched that of the hot, dry Sacramento Valley. His first stop was Antibes, on the Côte d'Azur, where he was met by a French government scientist who was also interested in stinkbug parasites. Before getting down to

Dialogue Reaffirms U.S.-Sweden Ties

STOCKHOLM - The United States is Sweden's second-largest trade partner, thanks to brands like Volvo, Saab and Electrolux. Most Swedes have relatives in America, and Swedes speak American English, watch American movies, read American books and listen to American music.

Despite the close cultural and economic ties, however, political relations between the two nations have at times been acrimonious, foundaring over the years on such issues as Vietnam, Nicaragua and Recently, relations have improved markedly - a fact that will be formally underlined early next month when Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson goes to Washington for the first state visit to the United States by a Swedish prime minister in 26 years.

"The relationship has been transformed," said Gregory J. Newell, the U.S. ambassador to Sweden. "We've replaced public crossfire with sitting down for a reasoned dialogue."

Both governments stress that the invitation to Mr. Carleson is not a personal one and that the process of mending diplomatic relations between Sweden and America began shortly before he became prime minister, following the still-unsolved assassination of Olof Palme on Feb. 28, 1986.

chased the truck and arrested three men a few minutes later. The incident happened on the Sierra Highway about 28 miles (about 45 kilometers).

Three persons have been killed and eight wounded in at least 42 roadway shootings in southern California since June 18. In an effort to control the violence, Governor George Denkmejian proposed on Saturday a $29 million increase in the Highway Patrol's budget to add 150 officers and to provide for overtime pay.

UN Conference Opening Without U.S.

WASHINGTON (NYT) - A United Nations conference is opening Monday in New York without the participation of the United States, which is boycotting it. The conference is to examine how money saved by disarmament could stimulate economic development, particularly in the Third World.

The United States is refusing to attend because it considers disarra-ment and development separate issues and rejects any suggestion that developing nations have a claim on money that might be freed by cuts in Western military spending.

So far, 128 countries, including all the other members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the members of the Warsaw Pact, have agreed to attend the three-week International Conference on the Relationship Between Disarmament and Development.

Barcelona Air Controllers End Strike

PALMA DE MAJORCA, Spain (Reuters) - A 24-hour strike by spanish air traffic controllers in Barcelona ended Sunday but the country's busiest summer airport, Palma de Majorca, was still in chaos.

Thousands of vacationers, mostly West Germans and Britons, were still waiting for flights that had been delayed Saturday. Of the Spanish Mediterranean airports, Palma was the worst hit by the strike, which was called over a pay dispute. Another strike has been called for next

"It's chaos here," said a spokesman for a West German charter a company, Lufthansa Condor. "It looks like a refugee camp." U.S. Presses For Improved Ties to Syria

By Neil A. Lewis

New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration is engaged in an intensive effort to improve relations with Syria, according to U.S. officials, who cited Syria's significant influence over events in the Middle

A fresh indication of the effort is a letter sent last week by Secretary of State George P. Shultz to the Syrian government thanking it for its efforts to bring about the release of Charles Glass, the American journalist who gained freedom from captivity as a hostage in Lebanon on Wednesday.

Vernon A. Walters, the chief U.S. delegate to the United Na-tions, already had telephoned a message of thanks to President Hafez al-Assad of Syria, according to State Department officials.

President Ronald Reagan also sent Mr. Assad a message express-ing appreciation for help in securing freedom for Mr. Glass, the Syrian news agency SANA reported.

The eagerness to credit Syria with a role in Mr. Glass's release is occurring even though officials acknowledge they are unsure if pressure from Damascus played any role in the event. There is a lively discussion among some officials over the plausibility of Mr. Glass's assertion that be escaped without any intervention.

But U.S. officials say they are confident Syria made great efforts to see that Mr. Glass was freed. "It is very interesting that he was.

the only one about whom the Syrians felt very strongly and he is the only one who happened to escape," an official said, suggesting a link.

The Syrians were especially eager to have Mr. Glass released because he was the only U.S. hostage to have been abducted after Damascus moved troops into West Beirut on Feb. 22, the Syr thorities said they treated the abduction as "an unacceptable challenge" and asserted control of the

The United States also is sending its ambassador, William L. Eagleton Jr., back to Damasous next month. Mr. Eagleton was withdrawn on Oct. 4 in a show of support for Britain, which accused Syris of complicity in an attempt to place a bomb on an Israeli jetliner in London in April 1986.

Officials were emphatic that the decision to return the ambassador was undertaken before Mr. Glass's

But it is noteworthy, according to officials and diplomats, that Washington will be returning its ambassador while London has made no move to restore normal relations with Syria.

The U.S. campaign to improve ties to Syria began with a letter to Mr. Assad from Mr. Reagan in June. An official said that, although the letter discussed the issues of hostages and terrorism, Mr. rasized Syria's role in other Middle East issues, such as its influence in the Gulf war and the Arab-Israeli peace process.

these arrangements," the official said, "they are likely to disappear." That was a reference to do and foreign concerns that for years caused the six Arab kingdoms and sheikhdoms of the Saudi-led Gulf Cooperation Council to spurn U.S. offers of closer military ties.

Motivating these nations were feats of provoking retaliation from Iran and a desire not to stir up internal nationalist and Mosl fundamentalist forces opposed to overt Western influences in the Arab Gulf countries.

For that reason, whatever cooperation that has taken place has been conditioned on secrecy," a semor U.S. military official said. "On at least one occasion, an offer of stance has been withdrawn after it was reported publicly."

The official declined to elaborate on the offer, but other sources said the reference apparently was to a report in The Washington Post in June that Saudi Arabia had agreed to use its Airborne Warning and Control System radar planes to watch U.S. protected tankers in the southern Gulf.

The sources said the Sandis sought to pull out of the agreement and were coaxed back noly after engthy discussions. [Saudi Arabia has denied the re-

U.S. sources said the change in attitude appeared to have been prompted in large part by such recent incidents as rioting by Iranian pilgrims at Mecca, one of the holiest sites in Saudi Arabia, and the increased number of mines, apparently laid by Iran, being found in Gulf waters.

The sources said these incidents have made the Gulf states increasingly aware that their efforts to mollify Iran through appeasement and keeping the United States at

In addition, some U.S. officials said, when tension in the Gulf began increasing earlier this year because of developments in the Iran-Iraq war, many Guif states expressed doubt that the United States would be willing to commit sizable forces to protect shipping in

U.S. Agrees to Aid Hanoi in Return For Help on MIAs

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration has said it has sent three U.S. medical experts to Victnam under an agreement to give the country humanitarian help and obtain information on Americans missing in the Vietnam War.

The experts, including two spe-cialists in orthopedic rehabilitation, will be in Hanoi for three days of talks beginning Tuesday, according to the State Department.
They were identified as Dr. Carl-

1887 1887 1887 1887 and all that... The Trib's Centennial Quiz Who was he? 1887 1887 and all their influence, he completely changed his own approach to painting and discovered the new style which after his death three years later was to make him world famous. Who was he?

Hundreds of valuable prizes await participants in the IHT's centennial quiz, focusing on the year of the paper's founding.

1887 is a special year for the International Herald Tribune, for it was on October 4th of that year that James Gordon Bennett, Jr. made journalistic history by launching our newspaper in Paris. But lots of other significant things happened that year as well — more than you may realize!

Because our Centennial is an occasion in which we want to welcome our readers' participation, we have created the following Centennial Quiz, built around events and personalities of historic significance who, in some special way, are linked to the year 1887.

Every person who answers 15 or more of these questions correctly will receive an IHT souvenir in thanks for his or her participation. Those who answer the most questions correctly will be recognized in our pages — and will receive a larger prize. Prizes will include gift books, travel-related luxury goods, and free subscriptions (or prolongations of subscriptions) to the IHT. To spread the prizes geographically, the ten highest scores from each country will qualify as winners with any ties resolved in favor of the earlier entries.

Everyone can enter the contest except International Herald Tribune employees and their families. So fill in the quiz coupon and send it right away. Contest closing date will be October 4, 1987 our actual anniversary date. Correct answers will be printed in the newspaper, along with the names of all the winners.

Our Questions:

- 1. Begun in 1887, it became two years later the tallest structure the world had ever seen, and remained so for 41 years. What was it, which building did it succeed as the world's tallest, and which finally surpassed it in 1930?
- Which famous literary figure made his first appearance in 1887, and who were the two doctors whom he also helped to immortalize?

22. 1887 marked the birth of a celebrated English writer of poetry and prose whose very close family relation with two other writers produced a fashionable movement of literary thought and style. Who was this titled writer?

23. He was born in 1887 in Pennsylvania but later became governor of another state. As the Republican candidate for President of the United States, he ran unsuccessfully against one of America's better known presidents. Who was he? 24. In 1887 he was working in the New York Customs House and writing a book of poems called John Marr and Other Sailors —although the work that has made him world famous had already been published 35 years earlier. Who was he? 25. In 1874, the eccentric owner of a major New York newspaper moved permanently to Paris. Tradition says that, 13 years later, the sound of a bird in the night convinced him to found a newspaper in Paris. Today, 100 years later, that paper is still publishing. Who was its founder, what was the new paper's full original name, and what was the bird whose noctur-

An Elusive Hart Surfaces in Dublin

DUBLIN — Gary Hart, the former U.S. presidential candidate who dropped out of sight last week after reports that he might rejoin the campaign, turned up Sunday at a Gaelic footbell match in Dublin.

Mr. Hart had been last seen by news reporters on Friday morning when he left a vacation cottage in western Ireland, reportedly without paying a

"In the circumstances, it was understandable that he forgot to pay," Mary Clancy, who rented the lakefront house to Mr. Hart, told the Irish Independent on Saturday, "He had planned to stay here until the end of the month."

There were reports that he had cut his vacation short to fly to the United States. An Irish Radio reporter said Friday that Mr. Hart had told him be was returning immediately to the United States "because of developments" and wanted to avoid media attention.

But on Sunday Mr. Hart joined tens of thousands of cheering fans at the football match, in which players dribble the ball with hands and feet.

He sat in the VIP box at Dublin's Croke Park stadium, Press Association, the British domestic news agency, said.

The agency said he slipped away early, however, avoiding reporters' questions about reports that he might rejoin the race for the Democratic nomination for president in 1988.

The former senator from Colorado pulled out of the campaign on May 3 after reports that he was involved in an extra-marital liaison with a model, Donna Rice.

Mr. Hart became the subject of intense speculation Friday after William Dixon, his former campaign manager, said in a radio interview in Wis-consin, "Based on what I know, it is likely Senator Hart will re-enter the presidential race in 30 to 60 days in a nontraditional campaign focused primar-

Labor disputes continued to arise at hotels, factories, depart-ment stores and workshops around the nation. The Labor Ministry reported that more than 1,600 companies had been hit by strikes or stoppages since July 1, with two thirds of those now resolved.

The government said 541 dis-putes remained unsettled Sunday, compared with 511 on Saturday.

A Daewoo Motor assembly line worker said that grievances had accumulated during decades of restrictive government policies, when most unions were prohibited and wages were kept low to fuel growth and exports.

Among the unsettled strikes were several affecting the South Korean tourist industry. In Seoul, workers continued to occupy the lobbies of the Lotte and Seoul Plaza Hotels, and ground crews at Kimpo International Airport ex-

The Rebounding Deficit

Until this summer, just about everybody cash in their capital gains before the prefer-happily assumed that post legislation had put the U.S. budget deficit on a path pointed safely downward. That pleasant thought naturally induced a degree of relaxation in Congress and at the White House. People in both places, but especially at the White House, saw less necessity for painful compromises and more opportunity for posturing.

Then the Congressional Budget Office began quietly warning its employers that the pattern had changed since last winter. The path no longer leads downward. On the contrary, if there's no further action, the deficit will soon start rising again. The CBO offered this new forecast in detail in the annual midsummer review that it published last week.

To get the deficit moving down again will require legislation to carry out the budget resolution that Congress passed in June, or something similar. But the budget resolution was designed by the Democratic leadership over vehement Republican objections and, because it requires a substantial tax increase President Reagan has repeatedly promised to veto any bills that try to implement it. The deadlock now looks a good deal more dangerous than it did a month ago. CBO says that it changed its earlier forecast for two reasons. First, because of last year's tax reform act people are rushing to nues much higher than the forecasters expected in the current fiscal year, which ends in six weeks, but means lower revenues in the following years. Beyond that, interest rates and inflation are both running higher than CBO anticipated six months ago, and both push spending up automatically. The result is that, instead of the $176 billion that CBO forecast last winter, this fiscal year's deficit will be only about $156 billion. But in the year beginning Oct. 1, in the absence of more deficit-cutting legislation, it will be back up around $183 billion with no improvement visible in the years beyond.

Over the past year the U.S. economy has nefited enormously from the general belief that the federal government has at last found the political will to bring its budget deficit down, surely and steadily. If Presi dent Reagan and the Democratic leadership of Congress between them now allow that belief to evaporate, they will invite the kind of leap in interest rates that can throw the country into a recession. The fault for the present deadlock lies chiefly with Mr. Reagan. But if it cannot be broken prompt-ly this fall, the costs next year will reach far beyond politicians' reputations.

arms reductions and American constancy, have worked their way back to an old puzzle: how to strengthen Europe's commitment to its own security. It's a familiar and often fruitless activity. Yet some of the ideas now being discussed, particularly between Paris and Bonn, could yield a stronger alliance and deserve encouragement.

Sparked by worry over the United States' commitment, the French and British have discussed joint nuclear strategy, the French and West Germans have stepped up joint troop maneuvers and all three have increased cooperative planning and defense production. The most significant idea being talked about is for a French-German brigade of some 3,000 men, outside the NATO command structure. The idea harks back to proposals by the former West German chancellor, Helmut Schmidt, to combine the two nations' armed forces. Such suggestions have bumped up against the same old wall. Germany is committed to NATO; France left its joint military command in a burst of Gaullist nationalism in 1966.

Still, the idea of French-German cooperation recurs whenever the need to strengthen conventional forces arises - because it

European leaders, fratting over nuclear makes so much sense. Being able to count on French divisions, and on French facilities for British and American reinforcements, would do wonders for the non-nuclear capability of the Western alliance.

The current brigade proposal was made by Chancellor Helmut Kohl. The French response was enthusiastic, but with the expected reservation that the joint force must be outside NATO's military structure. In other words, French forces would not serve under a NATO general. This time, however. French and other officials suggested paths for skirting the old wall. The brigade could operate alongside alliance forces if not under NATO command. Or it could be put under the aegis of NATO's political structure, in which France participates.

A fully independent French-German beigade would disrupt NATO military plan-ning and political cohesion. But French leaders now are making the right noises. It's healthy for Paris to want to be part of discussions on new European security arrangements. Formulas to preserve French amour propre are fine, as long as the joint brigade is effectively integrated, both stra-tegically and operationally, with NATO.

A Washington Triumph

With exceptional harmony and vision, the ment. This is estimated to save the governgovernment of the United States has acted to transform a glaring eyesore in the center of its capital city into a crowning jewel of the Federal Triangle — bringing new life and even more grandeur to the "Avenue of the Presidents." Where a functional but ugly parking lot now abuts the District Building there is to be an International Cultural and Trade Center of monumental proportions and great versatility of use.

By all accounts, including those of the relatively novel arrangement: the General Services Administration will sign a 30-year master lesse for the office space, which is to be used as collateral to obtain financing. A private developer, selected competitively, will build the project and own it for the life of the lease, when it will revert to the government a good $270 million rent on its way to taking title. The center itself will be a home for international trade offices and pertinent U.S. agencies as well as a showcase for exhibits and performers from every continent, along with boutiques, restaurants and outof-sight, instead of unsightly, parking with more spaces than there are now.

To fulfill this commitment to function and flair, the president must appoint a 15member commission. The members should be distinguished, no project is a plus. It is to be built under a determined to guide the project speedily through a series of plan approvals that had best be completed by midsummer 1988. The unanimous consent of both houses of Congress and presidential support for this history-making endeavor should not be squandered by bureaucratic delays.

The connection between a Big Mac package and a healthier world may seem a little remote, but chlorofluorocarbon gases are one of the globe's more insidious, unseen environmental threats; they contribute to the destruction of the ozone layer, the protective shield against the sun's ultraviolet rays. That radiation is blamed for everything from skin cancer to adverse changes in climate. As the largest restaurant chain in the world, McDonald's is setting an example that should be followed. It also is a reminder to governments that the problem still requires a global solution.

New York recently became the first state nary resuscitation from patients who refuse it. The law also grants civil and criminal immunity to health professionals who carry code," meaning medical resuscitation out a lawful "do-not-resuscitate" order in good faith or who, unaware of such an order, resuscitate someone who didn't want to be.

Under the measure, patients are permitted to decide, in advance, to forgo emergency resuscitation even if they're not terminally ill. They're also permitted to appoint someone to decide on their behalf if they become incompetent. Failing such directives, the law affirms the presumption that all patients consent to be resuscitated. But if a patient is both incompetent and terminally ill, hospital or nursing home officials can choose a surrogate from family or close friends. If no surrogate is available, the law permits a do-not-resuscitate order from a court or from two physicians who determine that resuscitation is medically futile.

The orders must be reviewed case by case every three days in hospitals and every 60 days in nursing homes. The law also requires that a patient's competence be established by physicians and that a procedure be estab-lished for mediating any conflicts between a patient's desire not to be resuscitated and a physician's personal convictions or professional ethics. While inevitably cumbersome, the new law does much to dispel the confusions and accidental cruelties that accompany new medical technologies. Above all, it recognizes a patient's right to make choices about death as well as life. _ THE NEW YORK TIMES.

An Eyewitness Account of Mecca's Bloody Afternoon

By Mushahid Hussain

The writer, a Pakistani author and editor who went on pilgrimage last month to Mecca, in Saudi Arabia, witnessed the demonstration by Iranian pilgrims on July 31 that resulted in hundreds being July 31, and an annual fixture in Mecca since killed. He contributed this account of those events to The Washington Post. tions, with the Saudis represented by Hajj Min-> tors would move in a procession ending at the Ministry of Posts and Telecommunications Building, about a mile (1.5 kilometers) from the Holy Mosque. The Iranians expected to end the whole show by sundown, at 7:15 P.M. Two days before, they had announced the ground rules, including the slogans to be chanted, and these were distributed through the daily "khabarnama," or news bulletin, with a copy sent to the Sandis. The three sanctioned slogans were "Death to America," "Death to Russia" and "Death to Israel." Mr. Khashoggi and Mr. Jehangiri walked the route of the demonstration the day before. But Thursday evening, Mr. Khashoggi came to the Iranians with three conditions, all of which were rejected. First, the number of demonstrators should be restricted burning of American flags.) It was agreed that (the Iranians said there would be approximately the demonstration would begin at 4:30 P.M. and 100,000, the same as in 1986). Second, no foreign end at 6:30 P.M., and that then the demonstrapilgrims should be allowed to participate. Third, there should be no attempt to involve Saudi citizens, or allow their participation.

In the event, some 500 foreign pilgrims took part, including the leaders of Lebanon's Hezbollah, or Party of God, some Afghan umjahidin, eras had been placed in adjoining buildings to monitor the demonstration. Helicopters were constantly hovering overhead.

The participants gathered in front of build-representatives of the Moro National Liberation Front in the Philippines and two cousins of the Sudanese prime minister, plus an assortment of Arabs, Pakistanis, Indians and Bangladeshis. Soon after the Friday prayer, at 1:30 P.M., Saudi security forces began gathering at the site of the demonstration, many in armored cars and others wearing riot gear. Seven video cars-ing that housed the headquarters of Iran's official hajj mission and the demonstration began promptly at 4:30 P.M. with recitation from the Koran. This was followed by Engineer" Mortazaifar, popularly known in Iran as "minister for slogans," leading the rhythmic chanting of slogans about the "three satans," the United States, the Soviet Union and Israel, and the three Modern causes of Palestine, Lebanon and Afabaniana and Afabania anon and Afghanistan. The principal speech was given by Ayatollah Karubi, official representative of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

At 6:30, after three U.S. flags were burned, the demonstrators began moving along the wide boulevard. The vanguard on one side was led by women clad in traditional black chadors, on the other side by war invalids in wheelchairs. All along the one-kilometer route, Iranian men stood with hands clasped. From the headquarters, through loudspeakers put in the middle of the divided boulevard, the 'minister for slogans' continued to orchestrate the crowd. Around 6:45, he said: "Please listen carefully for an important announcement." Then he said in a dramatic tone: "With divine assistance an American helicopter has crashed in the Persian Gulf. Allah akbar." God is great. The British Broadcasting Company had announced this news with a radio bulletin that morning.

Ten minutes later, when the vanguard of the procession was about 500 meters from the agreed-on termination point, it was stopped by a cordon of riot police in front of the large square that leads to the Holy Mosque a mile away. The crowd tried to move forward, and the police, with equal vehemence, told it to move back. Hot words were exchanged, tempers flared and scuffles followed. Simultaneously, stones and bricks began to be thrown from the second and third stories of a parking facility to the crowd's left. (Some Iranians later speculated that those throwing the stones and bricks had been Iraq agents, planted there in advance.)

At first, the police retreated from the stones and bricks, and the Iranians turned their banners into sticks to beat the Saudis. Then Saudi reinforcements arrived with tear-gas sitelis and the crowd started retreating. But the exit points were choked the security forces, which forced the demonstrators to either remain in the open on the main street or to seek refuge in buildings along the way.

Although I did not see police firing on the demonstrators, as the crowd ran for cover shots could be loudly heard. And when the whole thing was over, in an hour, people were carried away with bullet wounds in the chest, arms and thighs. Empty cartridges were found on the main street.

About 9 P.M. I walked along part of Masjid al Haram Street to the point where the rioting had begun. In front of some shops I counted 20 bodies, of Iranian women, most clad in chadors stained with blood. They were being carried away in vans and trucks. The road was being cleared of banners, pieces of clothing and shoes, and rubber bullets three inches (76 millimeters) in length and one on the traditional value basis, could inch in diameter. By midnight the get even worse before getting botter, if the dollar starts to go down again. In part, it is a Catch-22 situation: scene was one of normalcy.

Casualties were exceedingly high for a riot of such a short duration. The Saudis put the toll at 275 Iranians, 42 other foreigners and 86 of their people. The Iranians put their death toll at more than 400, with 4,000 wounded, and another 50 said to be missing but presumed dead.

the dollar plunged so sharply fatalities was that many of the wounded bled to death because medical assistance could not be rendered in time. The authorities, unable to cope with so meny casualties, summoned a number of Pakistani doctors from Medina and Jeddah.

Iranians in Mecca said later that "we were caught unawares." Ayatollah Karubi, at his headquarters two days later, seemed shaken and wor-ried. He accused the Saudis of "a massacre in front of the house of God, although everything was decided before the demonstration." He seemed surprised at the turn of events. The Saudis should be faulted for the excessive use of force against un-armed demonstrators, but the Iranians, too, made mistakes. When the crowd of demonstrators was stopped by security forces, there was no one to guide it, since the leaders were not in front. Given the rising tensions in the region and Saudi sensitivity to the demonstration, the Iranian leaders, at the very least, should have anticipated the possibility of trouble.

The Iranians, it now seems, were overconfident and felt that "nobody can touch us"; the Saudis, angered by the recurrent demonstrations, were in a mood to "teach these Iranians a lesson." With Mecca barred to Westem journalists, the Saudis then re-leased their own casualty figures and produced a documentary crudely one-sided in its display of violence. But what happened there in Mec-ca on that fateful Friday afternoon underlined the growing conflict between two approaches to Islam; one that favors the status quo, the other that aims to foster revolutionary change. If anything, the future in the Islamic world promises an accentuation of this conflict.

The Pope Should Embrace Reality, Not Waldheim

WASHINGTON — The pope wears two hats: the religious cap of moral authority, which causes him to be taken seriously when he speaks of peace, and the secular cap of expediency, which sometimes requires him to do business with dictators to maintain the church presence. Sometimes those roles conflict.

SLAMABAD, Pakistan — The Iranian pil-

1983, was the subject of intense prior negotia-

ister Abdul Wasie and his deputy, Hesham

Khashoggi, and the Iranians by Ayatollah Mehdi Karubi, his deputy, Jehangiri, and Dr. Mohammed Ali Hadi, a member of parliament. Initially, the Saudis urged the Iranians to not hold the demonstration, arguing that the pilgrim-age was meant for the performance of religious tites and that any political rally would detract from this. The Iranians retorted that religion and politics are indivisible in Islam and that such a demonstration would generate awareness among Moslems of their problems, most of which are political. They also argued that, since past demonstrations had been peaceful, there was no reason to presume this one would be otherwise

According to Mr. Jehangiri, the Saudis gave their "general consent" to the demonstration, and to its "modalities": the route, including a clear demarcation of the starting and ending points, the timing and the content of slogans and banners. (One new feature this year was to be the grims' demonstration, scheduled for Friday,

For Pope John Paul II, the decision to receive Kurt Waldheim — to praise as a man of peace a liar associated with arrocities — was not ennobled by any need to protect priests from persecution, The maneuver may have strengthened the Catholic Church in largely Catholic Austria, but the pope's political absolution of an unrepentant Nazi collaborator cost the Vatican much moral capital.

To recoup, the pope is writing friendly stateme about Jews and scheduling audiences with Jewish leaders. They will tell him that soothing words are no substitute for a deed too long left undone: the time has come for the Vatican to establish diplomatic relations with the state of Israel.

Is the pope's refusal to let the phrase "government of Israel" pass his lips a moral shortfall? Yes, I think so; but it would be a mistake to address the pope with a moral argument when he is wearing his realpolitik hat. Nor is it seemly for proud Israelis to plead for the Holy See's "recognition." The way to get diplomatic movement is to show the Vatican that its present position works against practical Catholic interests.

It will help to sweep aside the phony excuses. If you ask the Apostolic Nunciature in Washington why the Vatican snubs Israel, you get a · By William Safire vapid document put out by the Library of Congress's Congressional Research Service sum-marizing the 1984 position of the pope:

The first excuse is the absence of a peace settle-ment and of internationally recognized boundaries defining Israel and Jordan. But the Vatican has atic relations with Taiwan, which not even the United States now recognizes, and with Iran and Iraq, who have a border dispute going.

Then there is the "unresolved status of the Palestinians." Does the Vatican really expect that issue to be resolved as a precondition to its naming of an official muncio to Israel? No. Supposedly the third main issue: "The Holy See has called for some form of corpus separature guaranteed by international statute to assure protection of the shrines, unimpeded access and a secure and continuing Christian presence." But the only way to move toward its goals is to negotiate; the church's desires should be a reason for establishing relations, not a reason for continued isolation.

One basic reason is never mentioned: it must stick in the Vatican's craw that the Jews should predominate in the land of Christ. Setting aside such crusader nostalgia, another real reason for the Varican's alcofness is mentioned in passing: the effect that de jure recognition would be likely to have upon the Church and its members in Lebanon and other Arab countries . . . " That's the nub of it: the Vatican has allowed its policy

But Vatican policy resisting learer's legitimacy has failed for generations. For half this century, popes sought the internationalization of Palestine; that flopped. After Israel established itself in 1948, popes fell back to calling for the internationaliza-tion of Jerusalem; the Arabs of Jordan would have none of that. After 1967, the Vatican position fell back to the internationalization of the holy places; that did not happen. In recent years, that has been fuzzed to a hope that no religion will predominate, and corpus separatum is stressed less than the call ic "international statute" to insure Israeli respect for Christian interests, but no progress can be made without diplomatic relations. The worst failure in the popes' too-little-too-late policy has been in Lebanon. In the last decade, 100,000 Maronite Christians have been killed. The Vatican policy to appeare the Arab world has failed to prevent horrendous loss of ife among the people it wants most to protect.

Realpoints suggests that the pope change the failed policy. The archaic meaning of "see" is "seat;" if the Holy See will not take its seat at the diplomatic table, it cannot play in the game of peacemaking (Realists in the Kremin are coming to understand that, too.) To further the interests of Christians, the Varican should establish normal relations with Israel. Not to make up for the Waldheim abomination; not to put moral considerations above all; but simply to give the voice of the Vatican some resonance in the Middle East. The New York Times.

Boycotting a UN Forum, Washington Harms Itself

By Edward C. Luck

ered here Sunday to begin discussing the relationship between reducing mili-tary spending and increasing funds for economic development. One country, the United States, is boycotting the United Nations-sponsored conference. Last month, in a similar gesture of negative diplomacy, the Reagan ad-ministration sent a middle-level Foreign Service officer - who described himself as a "traveling insult" — to represent it at the UN Conference on Trade and Development. Why has the administration once again chosen to stand alone, thumbing its nose at the rest of the world? Is it standing up for some charished principle? Not really. Is it avoiding a high risk or hostile event? Not really. Is it foregoing a prime opportunity to voice its views before the world? Quite possibly. U.S. officials worry that the conference will become nothing more than a platform for anti-American rhetoric and Soviet propaganda. Considering the preparatory work however, there seems to be little cause for concern. But by its absence, the United States might turn an otherwise benign event into a forum for grumbling about American arrogance. The subject of the conference, moreover, is one that should prove more embarrassing to Mikhail Gorba-chev than to Ronald Reagan. While the Soviet Union may produce disarmament initiatives at a breathtaking rate, it is still laggard when it comes to assisting economic development in poor countries. Most of Moscow's meager foreign assistance budget goes to prop up a handful of client states. The Soviet Union also continues to spend a far greater portion of its gross national product on the military than does the United States. Moscow is hardly in a position to claim that Washington's position on disarmament is contributing to the economic backwardness of the developing countries. Despite reduced support for foreign aid and the UN system, the United States does far better than the Soviet Union in both regards, and the American private

N EW YORK — Representatives of sector remains a strong supporter of people in need around the world. people in need around the world.
U.S. officials also assert that no relationship exists between disarmament and economic development and that, therefore, they would have nothing to talk about at the conference. But a draft of the final document for the conference states that "disarmament and development are distinct processes." The United States could present its argument that money saved by disarmament could not automatically be transferred to development purposes. Appropriations me require the participation of Con-gress. Nonetheless, the interrelationship is worth exploring.

Washington could also tell developing countries that if they are truly interested in releasing funds for development, they should focus their disappears. disarmament efforts on reducing conventional forces and military expenditures worldwide. Although public attention is focused on the nuclear menace, 80 percent of the world's $1 trillion military expenditure is for non-nuclear forces. During the last two decades, the proportion of gross national product devoted to military outlays has grown in poor countries and shrunk in wealthy ones. In disarmament, as in development, less developed countries need to look at their own priorities as well as those of the major military powers.

The United States could have said many things at the forum. It has a good case, but it won't be there to present it. It might have found some attentive ears for its message, given the growing trend towards pragmatism, moderation and flexibility among nonaligned countries. But rather than confidently setting forth its ideas and exercising global leadership, the Reagan administration is content once again to hide its head in the sand, fearful of an open competition with competing ideologies and perspectives.

Frightful Trade Figures: A Monthly Statistical Trap

By Hobart Rowen The problem is that the deficits,

WASHINGTON — Once again, U.S. trade figures have con-founded the "experts": The June def-icit rose sharply to $15.7 billion, from $14 billion in May. And while the old homily about the danger of paving too much attention to one month's data is still true, the bigger deficit is a disappointment, especially when the smart money expected a decline.

As a result, we've had a weaker dollar - a sign that financial markets believe that the worst is not over, despite the Reagan administration's earlier assurance, endorsed by many private economists, that the trade deficit would begin to come down. "We underestimated the extent to which rising foreign prices offset the real improve-ment in the trade picture," said C. Fred Bergsten of the Institute for In-ternational Economics. He could have been speaking for all economists.

The fact is, the U.S. trade deficit is shrinking, even though the commonly used statistics don't seem to show it. Import prices skyrocketed 14.5 per-cent from June 1986 to June 1987, and more than two-thirds of that has occurred since Jan. 1 of this year. Thus, even though the volume of imports is down, their value is up, more than offsetting a modest increase in exports that has stirred some enthusia U.S. centers. Robert Ortner, chief economist for the Commerce Department, estimated that the "real" trade deficit, using constant 1982 prices, has declined about $30 billion, at an annual rate, since last September The question thus arises: If data on the value of exports and imports is disguising an improving trend, how can that message better be conveyed to the public? Can figures be developed, similar to the "real" gross national product, that will give a more valid impression of what is going on? Senator John Danforth, Repul can of Missouri, has sponsored legis-lation, part of the omnibus trade bill, that would require the Commerce coincident with its publication of monthly trade numbers in dollar-value terms, the equivalent delicit or surplus in volume terms. If we had it, it would be very useful," Mr. Ortner said, "because we are doing a lot better than the figures show." But, he said the government does not have available, on a sufficiently timely basis, the monthly price data with which to determine the "real" or deflated trade volume. The economic and political poten-tial of a new indicator could be significant. For example, it's likely the announcement of June's raw figures — the rise in the deficit to $15.7 billion not only rocked the foreign-exchange markets but bolstered the chances for tough U.S. trade legislation. It isn't possible, Mr. Ortner said, to develop a precise volume figure for the June deficit. But we do know this much: From the third quarter last year to the second quarter of this year, the deficit didn't improve much. It declined only from an average of $14.9 billion to $14.2 billion monthly. In constant, i.e., 1982, prices the deficit dropped from a monthly rate of $16 billion to $13 billion. Mr. Ortner the two series of numbers are not exactly comparable. But a decided with a weaker dollar, which pushes up prices, the trade deficit tends to increase as an immediate response. That's the famous "J-curve" effect. Over the past 30 months, in which against the yen and the mark, Japanese and West German manufacturers at first successfully maintained their market shares by cutting profit margins. More recently, they have been forced to boost their prices. Now, once again, the dollar is weaker. For a period, starting with the agreement signed in Paris in February, the major democratic industrial countries had successfully estabished and defended "target zones" for their exchange rates. The yen, for example, was set at about 153 to the dollar. But after the June trade-deficit figure was published, the dollar began to decline again. By the middle of last week, it had dipped to 144 yen. A continuation of the dollar's alide, as Mr. Bergsten and other economists think necessary and expect, will further boost import prices and exacerbate the trade deficit for the United States in value terms. It isn't clear when the ultimate goal of exchange-rate adjustments - the discouragement of imports because of high prices - may hap-pen. To the extent that U.S. manuturers raise their prices, as Chrysler has just done for 1988 model cars, the beneficial effects of a lower dollar are diminished, and inflation gets an upward thrust. But in the interim, the big trading nations need to climb out of a statistical trap. The Danforth amendment and anything else that would strip emotions from the trade figures would be a big help.

As Trade Data Strike Again, Market Shows Some Spirit

By JONATHAN ENGEL

ARIS - The June U.S. trade figures came back to haunt the Eurodollar bond market in a different guise on Friday, but the effect was similar to when the $15.7 billion deficit was first announced exactly one week before. Figures for growth in U.S. second-quarter gross national product, revised downward largely because of the trade deficit, still weakened the dollar more than they helped the bond market.

And in a bond market preoccupied with the dollar, that's all it took to send the benchmark 30-year U.S. Treasury bond lower, to a Friday close of 99 in New York, more than 2 percentage points below the previous Friday fin-

The larger-than-expected trade deficit had already been battering the U.S. currency for most of the week. Even so, as expected, the Eurodollar bond market showed enough resilience to support some sizeable new issues. Indeed, the week's $1.3 billion in fixed-rate dollar bonds was the largest volume in nearly six months, following $1.94 billion in the week beginning March 2. But, bond managers emphasized, the generally favorable market response to the new offerings primarily reflected yields that were alluring enough to force selective investors to switch from other bond holdings. Few noticed any fervent demand fueled by inflows of fresh cash.

We've seen very good demand this week for dollar bonds," said Andrew Pelling, a syndication manager at Nomura Interna-tional Ltd. "I think all the deals have been reasonably fairly priced." He added, though, that according to reports from the company's salesmen, investors are keeping most of their money in cash and short-maturity bonds of up to three years. "I don't think there's a lot of new money coming into the market." he said.

A syndication official at a U.S. investment bank agreed. "There's a lot of paper," she said, "but it's been very carefully marketed and there have been more reasonably priced issues than there have been recently. I don't think the retail is there to support an ongoing dollar market," she added, because the dollar "is what's holding everything back."

AFTER THE GNP figure was revised down to an annual rate of 2.3 percent, from the previous estimate of 2.6 percent, the dollar fell to 1.8150 Deutsche marks in New York, losing 6 plennigs from the previous Friday. The dollar also finished down 8 yen from the week before, at 142.15, the lowest level since mid-June.

The bond market was comfortable with the slow pace of the economy," contended a syndicate manager at a large U.S. commercial bank. This sluggishness, which dampens inflation, was also reflected in the trade figures. But, he said, the foreign exchange market grew worried that this slow growth, and a possible lowering of interest rates to stimulate the economy. would diminish investment demand for many dollar assets. "It's been very much a currency-driven market lately," he said.

investors also remain concerned that any further lowering of the dollar to correct the trade deficit might blunt foreign demand for dollar bonds on fears of currency losses. In addition, a lower dollar could increase inflation by boosting prices of imports.

Interestingly, the inflation news released Friday showed inflation subsiding from a quickened first quarter pace. July consumer prices rose a modest 0.2 percent, below the 0.4 percent June increase that analysts had expected to be repeated.

On an annual basis, the 5 percent rate for the first seven months of 1987 was significantly below the first quarter's 6.2

percent. And price rises measured by another standard, the GNP implicit price deflator, registered 3.8 percent, below the 4.5 percent of the first quarter. Also in the past week, two other gauges of inflationary pressure fell, as oil prices lost about $1 a barrel and gold dropped by more than $4 an ounce, paralleling a further reduction in fears over declining dollar. "The fact that the market's been able to absorb the level of issuing activity that it has, in relatively good shape, speaks well for it," said Ian Molson, syndication director at Credit Suisse First Boston Ltd.

"We're at a level in interest-rate terms where people are fairly comfortable." he said. "The market's trading much more on the basis of the exchange markets." But, he noted, "A lot of people are attracted to buying the dollar at what looks like bargain

Of the week's six dollar-straight issues, four carried five-year maturities. Mr. Pelling noted that investors were switching to See EUROBONDS, Page 9

They said that North Korea is in default to two bank syndicates on $770 million in principal and interest. New Zealand Banking Group. North Korea is believed to owe $1.65 billion to $2.75 billion to the noncommunist world.

Many large international banks participated in the lending. American banks, however, are legally prohibited from lending to North Korea, the bankers said.

Foreign debtors, particularly those in Latin America and Africa, have often fallen far behind on payments in the last few years. But t is up to the lending banks to decide whether to declare a country in formal default, and until now banks have preferred to overlook delinquency and try to work out a new schedule for payments.

European bankers have grown increasingly exasperated with North Korea, which they say has never repaid them any principal and has not paid any interest since March 1984.

The last straw came a few weeks ago during a new round of talks in London, when the North Koreans demanded new loans and then abruptly walked out of the negotiations, the bankers said.

"It's something that we have bent over backward to avoid doing," said a senior banker based in London, "But Western banks realy can't afford to let any debtor get away with not paying, because then the Latin debtors would follow

Another reason for the declaration of default seems to be the hope that the North Koreans will return to the negotiating table rather than risk the embarrassment of seizures and a resulting disruption of trade. One banker said that the syndi-cates would still hold off from try-

Don't Fight, Flee: Takeover Targets Switch States

By Mark Potts

BUSINESS ROUNDUP

Washington Poor Service
WASHINGTON — With the financier T. Boone Pickens hot on its trail, Singer Co. has moved its corporate beadquarters from Connecticut to New Jersey in an apparent effort to thwart his takeover advances.

Singer, a maker of military electronics equipment, shifted about 20 top corporate officials to Monvale, New Jersey, from Stamford, Connecticut, earlier this week. Other executives and clerical personnel remained in Stamford, which is about 40 miles (65 kilometers) from Montvale.

The move appears to be in keeping with the latest fad in takeover defenses: using favorable state takeover laws to evade an unwant-In previous cases, companies have persuaded their home states to change the laws in their favor. Singer simply switched states. Singer officials would not say that the unannounced, move was prompted by Mr. Pickens's interest in the company. "You have to draw your own conclusions," said Thomas Elliott, a Singer spokesman. "We moved our principal executive offices here so we could take advantage of all the New Jersey corporate laws," he said. Mr.

Mr. Pickens said earlier this month that his start a trend for companies that are incorpo-less Limited Partnership owned 4.4 percent rated in the handful of states, including New Mesa Limited Partnership owned 4.4 percent York and Indiana, that have takeover laws of Singer and wanted to buy as much as 15 percent of the company. It is not clear how many companies would be able to take advantage of the tactic pionecred by Singer. Most major American companies are incorporated in Delaware, regardless of their headquarters location, and would have to secure approval from stockholders to switch their incorporation.

Delaware laws are considered favorable to corporate managements, although they do not protect against takeovers as well as those of New Jersey, New York and other states.

Philips, based in Eindhoven in the Netherlands, has a 58 percent stake in the New York-based company. It said last week that it wanted to control all of North American Philips so that it could better coordinate its worldwide marketing strategy and react more swiftly to Japanese competitors. North American Philips's stock fell 25 cents to close at $53.875 Friday in trading on the New York Stock Exchange. But the share price was still well above its level of $42 before the offer was announced

Aug. 17. Analysis said that the American company's management might ask the parent to raise its bid to as much as $55 dollars a share. Philips announced separately on Friday that its tender offer, managed by Goldman, Sachs & Co., had begun. The offer is scheduled to expire at midnight Sept. 18 unless extended.

North American Philips, which makes televisions and other electronic products under the Norelco, Magnavox, Philos and Sylvania names, said last week that its board had appointed a committee of outside directors to review the bid.

Philips reported net profit of 1.02 billion guilders ($494.8 mil-lion) for 1986 on revenue of 55 billion guilders. North American Philips's profit declined almost 16 percent last year to $68.5 million on sales of $4.5

Robins Files Merger Plan

RICHMOND, Virginia — A.H. Robins Co, maker of the controversial Dalkon Shield contraceptive device, said Sunday that it had filed a reorganization plan to emerge from two years of bankruptcy. It said that the plan, filed Friday in a U.S. bankruptcy court, included the creation of two independent trusts providing about $2 billion "to administer and settle all valid Dalkon Shield claims."

In August 1985, the company filed for protection under Chapter II of the U.S. bankruptcy code after hundreds of thousands of women filed claims alleging that the Dalkon Shield device had caused problems ranging from sterility and miscarriage to death.

One of the trusts will cover settlement of claims by women who used the Dalkon Shield and the second will settle all other debts, including those to the Internal Revenue Service. The trusts will be financed through an initial $500 million cash payment, with the rest of the money to be paid over a seven-year period, it said.

The plan involves a proposed merger agreement with Rorer Group Inc., a Pennsylvania-based drug company that will guarantee the plan along with Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. of New York and Philadelphia National Bank. The plan is subject to approval by the shareholders of both companies and by the court. A hearing is scheduled Nov. 5.

NFL Raiders Seem Headed for the Pits

Los Angeles Times Service

IRWINDALE California - I ask Eddie Diaz, proprietor of the Diaz Liquor Store, just south of the Los Angeles Raiders' glory hole, what the city usually does with its Grand Canyon-sized rock quarries when they have been de-rocked and abandoned.

"Some of them have been filled with refuse," Diaz said. "But this is much more exciting, to have the Reiders fill it up."

Exciting? The National Football League Raiders filling up one of Irwindale's famed rock pits will be the most exciting thing to happen here since the turn of the century, when Irwin himself cranked up the area's first gas-powered water pump and brought in a flood of irrigation

His legacy remains. To this day, you can get a drink of water almost anywhere in town. But somewhere along the line Irwin's plans of turning the city into a citrus farm went awry. instead, Irwindale became a vast rock quarry. Today, the landscape of the city makes the moon look like Mani.

Nevertheless, the citizens of Irwindale are proud of their pits, which supply rocks and gravel to a hungry world. When one pit runs out of rocks, they dig another.
"You could dig forever in Irwindale," said

Dennis Chico, a longtime resident. Somehow, that wasn't enough to satisfy the city's ambitions. The Irwindalians wanted a football team, and they are thrilled that the Raiders have chosen their city. They figure it will be good for the Irwindale image. Put the city on the map.
"It's not just a bunch of holes anymore,"

Chico said, referring to Irwindale, not to the Raider offensive line, which is another story. The big story here is that the tiniest, ugli city in greater Los Angeles, maybe in the world, has landed the mighty Raiders...

This is a small town, folks. How small? Population 1,040. To fill the new stadium, each man, woman and child in Irwindale will have to buy about 1,000 season tickets. The city is so small that, several years ago, a candidate for city council lost an election by two votes. His brother and brother's wife forgot to vote. This is a town off the beaten tourist path. How do you get to Irwindale? Look for an empty gravel truck and stick out your thumb.

Going to a Raider game will be a thrill. Who says there are no true wilderness adventures left in California?

This is a town eager to grow. The Miller

Irwindale is a town eager to grow. The Miller Brewing Co. built a huge plant there after the city sold Miller the land for $1. Not to be slickered on the deal, the city insisted on being paid the full amount up front Brewing Co. built a huge plant here after the city sold Miller the land for $1. Not to be slickered on the deal, the city insisted on being paid the full amount up front.

This is a town aware of its sudden emerge This is a town aware of its sudden emergence into Los Angeles society. The locals will probably hire a public relations firm, which will suggest a spiffy new city motto to replace Jardin de Roca (Garden of Rock). They'll come up with something like "We Will Rock You!" or "Irwindale — I Can Dig It!"

Perhaps now the Raiders will honor their new home by renaming the team the Pet Rocks.

I just hope the Raider invasion won't spoil the natural beauty of Irwindale. The locals don't seem worsied. The overall attitude is. positive. Nobody I talked to said, "There goes

But they have to know their town will never be the same. The abandoned pits, for instance, will become overrun with our-of-town fishermen and scuba divers, once word gets out. Did you kniss that irwindale is the secret sportfishing capital of Several of the abandoned pits are partially filled with water. (The Raider pit, however it bone-dry, which should help the team's running agame). In the pits that have mini-lakes, I'm, fold, the water is clean and clear and teeming with fish. The rock-and-gravel companies planted the fish — base, carp, bluegills, cattish—to help contain the local bug population and to keep the water clean. There's no trespessing but. "Twe gone snorkeling down there," said Chico, pointing so an abandoned pit near his home. The water is very clear, a beautiful greenish-blue. You can see for 20, 30 feet [7.60 meters]. It's like Catalina. In other words, the water is clearer than the air. Irwindale is where the dust meets the smog. The Raider offense will be a 50-yard pass and a cloud of dust . By the way, this may be the first time everthat Catanna Island and Irwindale have been mentioned in the same story. Snorkelers and scubs divers will be able to tell the difference. the ocean floor off Catalina isn't covered with the ocean floor off Catamia and the control of the I've heard rumors of extremely big cattish down there. I won't say where the best pit is, but the fish are down there. Some guys chum with bait. then shoot the fish with a bow and arrow.

On the counter of Diaz's liquor store, under glass, is a snapshot of Irwindaie's unofficial record catch. A fisherman is holding a 25-pound, 39-inch [99-centimeter] mackerel. Photo inscription: "King of the hill, 3/8/86, Jim Text. from his secret bole."

Teal's record is in danger. The citizens of Irwindele have a bigger fish on the line, a 6,000 pound Raider. And they're reeling like crazy.

WORLD STOCKS IN REVIEW / Via Agence France-Press

Amsterdam.

The Amsterdam Stock Exchange was unable last week to maintain the rising trend of previous weeks: The ANP-CBS index closed Friday at 325 A down from 334.1 the Friday before. Disappointing U.S. trade figures were cited for part of the weakness, and the dollar's de-cline also left a mark.

According to Kempea & Co., the Amsterdam brokerage firm, the market remains sensitive to dollar movements and they will be the main issue during the coming week.

Volume for the week was 8.99 billion guilders, up from 8.11 billion the previous week.

Frankfurt

The dollar's drop of almost 6 prenning dur-ing the trading week hit the Frankfurt stock market as well, with prices falling by an average of 2 percent on the week.

The Commerchank index finished at 2,031.6 on Friday, Sown 9.5 from the previous Friday, Volume on the eight West German exchanges was 24,14 billion Deutsche marks, egainst 26.92 billion the week before.

Most blue chips moved lower, but BMW finished at 755 DM, up 13, and Karstadt at 555 DM, up 10. Daimler dropped 51 to 1,154, but VW was off by only 1 mark to 402.

Hong Kong

The Hong Kong stock market came under major selling pressure last week, with the Hang Seng Index finishing at 3,446.59 points, down 65.56 points from the previous week. Dealers attributed the mood to the market's last week, with the Hang need for a correction period, after record.

The only bright patch came Friday when the market scored its only gain of the week.

The broader-based Hong Kong Index finished at 2,258.78 points, down 44.49 points from the Friday before.

Average daily volume was 1.63 billion Hong Kong dollars, a long way off the previous week's 2.18 billion.

China Light-lost 1 dollar to close at 25.90; Hong Kong Land was down 25 cents, to 7.65; Swire Pacific lost 50 cents, to 24.30; Hong Kong Bank was up 10 cents to 10.30.

Dealers were mixed in their forecasts for the coming week. Some predicted that share prices would continue to climb, whole others said the long-awaited correction would continue.

London

Heavy losses were registered last week on the London Stock Exchange, caused by persistent worries about an overheating economy. The Financial Times industrial share index closed down 58.1 points for the week, at 1,727.2, its lowest level since January.

Fears that another rise in interest rates might be needed soon were reinforced by publication on Thursday of worse-than-expected money supply and bank lending figures for July, Figures for retail sales and the public-sector borrowing requirement had already caused nervousness early in the week.

But the market rallied on Friday, buoyed by the healthy state of trading on Wall Street and reconsideration of the rise in bank lending figures. The £4.9 billion rise was attributed less to consumer than to corporate borrowing.

Sharp losses were seen in the merchant banking sector. Weaker industrials included Pilkington, on news of a £255 million share issue, and Jaguar after disappointing interim

Milan.

Milan stocks fell for the third consecutive reck, with the Comit index closing at 615.36, down from the previous week's 634.34. The index has fallen 11 percent so far this month, and 15 percent this year.

Liquidity appeared to be strained, as many investors and speculators had their funds tied up in stocks that were listed on the market only. this month

The fall in prices on the Hong Kong Tokyo and Australian markets appeared to have contributed to the lack of buying interest.

Trading volume was thin, with only 152-3 million shares, valued at 428 million Singapore dollars, changing hands.

Tokyo

Share prices performed well in end-of-the week trading on the Tokyo Stock Exchange after early setbacks caused by the dollar's nose-dive against the yea.

The 225-issue Nikkei stock average, up by a befty 693.06 yea the previous week, gamed 269.42 Friday and Saturday to close at 25,764.99 yeu, for a weekly gain of 270.98 The composite TSE index for the major fire section closed at 2,164.97, advancing 59.01

Compiled by One Staff From Despatches NEW YORK - Randy Ready and John Kruk both hit home runs Saturday night to lift the San Diego Padres to a controversial 8-3 vic-

SATURDAY BASEBALL hit a sacrifice fly in the third and his 17th home run of the year leading off the sixth, when the Padres scored twice, made it 5-0. Trailing by 6-3, New York had a run nullified in the eighth, when umpire Dick Stello put a second ball in play and led the Mets to protest the game.

When Darryl Strawberry swung at a 1-1 pitch, the ball rolled away from catcher Benito Santiago. Runners Tim Teufel and Keith Hernandez advanced, but Stello tossed a new ball to pitcher Rich Gossage while Teufel was heading toward the plate.

Stello stopped Teufel and waved Gossage away, but Tenfel subsequently stepped on the plate before the four propings conferred, ruled a foul ball and sent both runners back to their original bases. Strawberry then struck out, Kevin McReynolds fouled out and the Mets did not score in the inning.

"He said that the ball was out of play," Toufel said. "It was a crazy play, especially when he threw the ball out of his pouch. Goose was going to tag me with that one, and I said Wait a minute - a minute ago as back by the

P ARIS - Louis Jouvet was indisputably one of the foremost French actor-directors of his generation. He died in 1951, stricken by a heart attack during a rehearsal, and as this year marks the centenary of his birth his prodigious contribution is receiving tribute.

A play, "Elvire Jouvet 40," which shows him training actors, has been awarded several prizes and after a Paris engagement is off on a European tour. An exhibition of the scenic designs and costuming of his productions, together with scripts on which he scribbled notations, is making the rounds of lestivals and museums, and many of the movies in which he appeared are being re-issued.

His essays on acting and staging have been collected in book form. Madeleine Ozeray, a leading actress of his company, and Léo Lapara, his quondam manager, have given glimpses of the man behind the mask. Jean-Marc Loubier has published a full-scale account of the actor's career (Editions Ram-

He was born in Brittany on Christmas Eve. 1887, the son of middle-class parents. Educated at religious schools, he read classic drama and, participating in student plays. His family regarded acting as shameful and be was urged to study chemistry. He did and went to work in a pharmacy in the Paris suburbs when he was 18. In the evenings he haunted the playhouses and saw many of the great players of the time, among them, Sarah Bernhardt, Mounet-Sully and Réjane.

He eventually joined an acting troupe, painting scenery and becoming a competent electrician and an expert at makeup, then playing heavies in hoary melodramas and doing comic bits. His big chance came when, with a long white beard, he played Father Zossima in "The Brothers Karamazov." Jacques Copeau. the adaptor, was struck by Jouvet's remarkable resources in performing the difficult assignment.

Copeau was intent on reforming French theatrical presentation. He leased the Vieux Colombier theater and reconstructed it for his experiments. His model was the Elizabethan platform with its simplicity and its accent on text and acting. He opposed lavish decor and dazzling costuming as distractions. Jouvet joined Copeau's company and found in its fold three other aspiring young men: Charles Dullin, Georges Pitoeff and Gaston Baty. They, like Jouvet, rose to be prominent leaders of the new movement.

Copean opened his theater in October 1913 with a performance of Thomas Heywood's 1603 play. "A Woman Killed with Kindness." Jouvet's acting was praised by André Gide and Leon Blum, then a drama critic.

When war was declared in 1914 he spent three years at the front before he was hospitalized in 1917 and demobilized.

In 1920, after three years in New York for the French government, Jouvet and the other Vieux Colombier pioneers returned to Paris and continued their explorations of the theater's intellectual possibilities, but the public for such entertainment had dwindled. Revues and boulevard comedies were in favor. Pitoeff departed to produce new plays from abroad those of O'Neill Andreyev, Schnitzler and Shaw. Dullin withdrew to begin operations of his own at the Atelier, and Baty founded his "Chimère" group. Jouvet was invited to take charge of the Comédie des Champs-Elysées as actor-pro-ducer-director and established an enormous reputation. He staged the plays of Marcel Achard, Bernard Zimmer and Steve Passeur. In Jules Romains's "Knock" he impersonated a charlatan who preys on hypochondriacs. He later appeared in two films derived from His major discovery was Jean Giraudoux, a novelist whom he persuaded to turn to playw-riting. In the mid-1930s Jouvet at last had a theater of his own: the Athènèe. Its house playwright, so to speak, was Giraudoux, though other plays were included in the repertory. Giraudoux's "Electra," "Judith," "Amphitryon 38" and his adaptation of Margaret Kennedy's novel "The Constant Nymph" were honored with exquisite exposure behind the footlights. The last of this series of close collaboration — the dreamy fantasy "Ondine" with Madeleine Ozeray as the water sprite enamored of a mortal and with fairy-tale decor by Pavel Tchelitchew --was seen in the spring of 1939. It was a swan-song to an era. On the eve of World War II, it seemed to voice in a gentle whisper the sorrows of an expiring civilization.

The government offered Jouvet the admin-istration of the Comèdie-Française. He declined, but in gratitude mounted a magnifi-cent mise-en-scène of Corneille's "L'Illusion comique" at the House of Molière, Baron Henri de Rothschild, who had built the Theatre Pigalle with the most modern technical equipment in France, implored him to guide its fortunes. Again Jouvet refused, but staged on its boards Romains's "Doonogoo" and Alfred Savoir's "La Patissière du Village" with its moving memories of World War I. Another important event was his direction of Jean Coctean's Oedipus tragedy, "The Infernal Machine."

Once the talkies were established he was in demand, but he was distrustful of the medium. Still, he quickly mastered its technique and was soon a screen favorite, despite the fact he was inevitably given unsympathetic roles — a shady nightclub proprietor, a lac-civious monk, a police spy, a cold-blooded

When the Nazis occupied Paris in 1940 the German censors informed him that he must drop the plays of Girandoux and Romains from his repertory. They advised him to do Schiller instead. He applied to leave the country with members of his company and spent the remaining war years on a South American tour, homesick and in declining health.

Once Paris was liberated he returned. stirred to hear the chimes of Notre Dame ring out in victory. Giraudoux had died during the Occupation, but he had willed his associate a play - "The Madwoman of Chaillot," which urged humanity to resist the unscrupulous exploiters who were lurking to take over.

In the winter of 1945 Jouvet, reinstalled at the Athenée, presented his vanished friend's morality comedy with Marguerite Moreno as the lunatic lady in her shabby finery who with her instinctive cunning averts the catastrophe the author feared. Jouvet took part as the philosophical vagrant from the gutter who serves as the prime minister of the madwoman's eccentric court. Christian Bérard designed the atmospheric setting reflecting the script's moods, and the production became a legend for its unity of text and performance.

Jouvet retained his interest in new authors, but he had certain prejudices. One of these concerned Jean Anouill. After Anouill read concerned Jean Anount. After Anouth read him his comedy, "The Waltz of the Toreadors," Jouvet discussed it with an intimate. "It's a good play, well-written and well-constructed, but I won't do it," he announced. Why? That's simple. I have no wish to shake hands with any of its characters." On the other hand, he gave Jean Genet his first hearing as a playwright, directing The Maids," a lurid melodrama in which two servants plot to murder their mistress. Jouvet's commitments multiplied to staggering proportions in the last months of his life. His doctors cautioned him, but he refused to curtail his activities. He acted Tartuffe at the Athénée by night and completed a second film version of "Knock" at the studios

He took his company to New York in February for a six-week engagement in "L'Ecole des Femmes." On his return to France he began to prepare the staging of Sartre's magnum opus, "Le Diable et le Bon Dien," a demanding task as it had a cast of 60 and Sartre kept inserting new scenes. It opened at the Theatre Antoine with much fanfare in Exhansted and under strain Jouvet retired to the Athénée to turn to a a dramatization of Graham Greene's novel "The Power and the Glory." Jouvet, a perfectionist, found the first adaptation flabby and awkward and set to re-writing it with three others. Content with the revisions, he started rehearsals.

After a long session with his actors one afternoon he collapsed and fell into a coma. He was carried to a divan in his office and died there on Aug. 16, an end that has been compared to that of Molière, to whose work Jouvet had rendered such noble service.

The New, Improved Ads

By Patricia Volk ONE word in advertising has virtually limitless power. It gives "permission to believe." It inspires hope.
What "new" lacks in newness, it makes up for in motivation. Unfortunately, new gets old fast. Legally, it's usable for only six months after a product is introduced. As in, say. "Introducing New Grippies. The candy that sticks to the woof of your mout."

Once Grippies are 6 months old, imlike newlyweds, who get a year, and the New Testament which has gotten away with it for who knows how long. Grippies are reduced to just plain Grippies. That's when you improve them and say "Introducing New Improved Grippies."
Had you named your product to start with, as in "New Soap. The soap that cleans like " you'd never have to worry new," you'd never have to worry about your product sounding old. Introduced as "New New Soap," six months down the road it segues into "New Improved New Soap." Or you could avoid the six-month thing entirely and just call it "The Revolutionary New Soap."

How do you get the Grippies account in the first place? You "pitch" it in a flurry of work called e "push." A creative team works weekends and sleeps in the office. A successful pitch winds up in a "win," and you've "landed" the account. By the end of the week, everyone in the agency has a free box of Grippies and work begins. This is the "honeymoon period." You take the factory tour. You eat Grippies and you attend focus groups," i.e., meetings between re-searchers and members of your "target audience," the people you hope will love Grippies.

You sit behind a two-way mirror and watch people eat Grippies. You take notes. You start hating the man who scratches the exposed area of his leg between the top of his sock and the bottom of his pants. And what you learn in the focus group, you use to build "share," which is the percentage of the population using your kind of product that buys yours in particu-

If you can raise Forever Glue's .01 share of market (one person per thousand) to .03, Forever Glue will be a dazzling success. So you do the "Nothing lasts like Forever" campaign. You find a small town in a depressed area upstate and glue it back together. Brick by brick clapboard by clapboard, you acrually (layorite ad word) glue a town together and restore it in a classic "demo" with "product as hero." But what if your product is "par-ity," a "me-too-er" What if it has no "unique selling point" or "exclusivity"? What if the world is not waiting for Mega-Bran, the cereal that tastes like Styrofoam pellets and gets soggy in the bow!?

Some folks "make it sing." It's what everybody thinks people in advertising do anyway, as in, "Oh, you're in advertising! You must write jingles! So you write new words to Bon Jovi's "Never Say Goodbye, only the client doesn't want to spend $2 million for the rights. So you check out the PDs, public domain songs, songs with lapsed copyrights that are at least

At last the new Mega-Bran cam-paign is ready to crawl through all the "loops" in the "approval see the "loops" in the "approval cy-cle," from your client's kids to the network's lawyers, Everybody signs off" on it.

In "pretest," you get "rich verbatims" — a lot of people who remember everything about your commercial. You go for it. You shoot a finished "spot." You spects $250,000 on production, "net net," and $3 million on network and uboh, nobody buys the bran. Your commercial has failed to generate "trial" and "brand awareness." It's the Edsel of brans.

Quick, you do another "execution," a celebrity endorsement using someone with a high "Q" (familiarity and popularity) (Bill Cosby has the highest.) You try "image advertising," which says almost nothing, but leaves the viewer feeling good about your product.

Still no one remembers Mega-Bran. The account goes from shaky to the intensive care unit. Then it's "out the door." There is no funeral, no period of mourning because every loss presents an opportunity, a chance to roll up your sleeves, grease up your elbow and pitch
